Secretary Maxfield Unveils New Website

Cheyenne, Wyoming – Today Secretary of State Max Maxfield announced the unveiling of the new Secretary of State website. The “new and improved” website, deployed on June 28th, provides users with a more streamlined way of obtaining information from the Secretary of State’s Office.

Maxfield stated, “The new website will provide easy access to information for web users. The site was designed from a “customer centric” perspective – trying to keep in mind what people might be looking for. For example, the old site had filing forms and publications contained within specific Divisions. On the new site, information isn’t organized by division. Instead, it’s topical with a Forms & Filings main topic where all the agency’s forms and publications can be found. ”

The new website has added functionality and more information. “We’ve incorporated a “Polling Place Locator” that the public can use to find their polling place name, address, and voting district information simply by entering a few pieces of information.” Maxfield stated, “The Secretary’s Desk section of the site has tons of information! Along with the media releases, web surfers can find historical data, information about Wyoming’s state symbols, the state song, and even obtain the “Student Packet” which has a lot of information for those Wyoming history projects!”

Maxfield concluded by noting that the website has additional information about the various services provided by his Office. “If you are looking for information from, or about, the Wyoming Secretary of State’s Office, I suggest you hit our website! Much of what the public is looking for is available there.”

The website was designed and created by an in-house project team with the assistance of Tecuity, Inc., a Utah-based company.
